- Looking forward - reconstituted Board
- Your arrival very timely
- An exciting and difficult year ahead - lots of problems
- Good news - IC feels itself in good shape - good new leadership
  - Odom and Perroots
  - Continue to use predecessors Faurer and Williams
  - Lots of new, young leadership moving up
- I'd like to give you a broad picture this morning - hit the high spots and then take your questions
  - Good place to start - National Foreign Intelligence Strategy
  - SecState, SecDefense, myself and others at hearings during the fall
  - DCI tasked to produce strategy document - will have in print when Congress returns later this month
- In the strategy we provide:
  - A look at likely global conditions and the resulting strategic challenges to the United States in the next decade
  - Our thoughts on providing national intelligence in the 1990s based on planned and programmed capabilities
  - A sense of our priorities for the 1990s
- Some specifics include:
  - Concern for further development of Soviet strategic military power at home and their continued exacerbation of trouble spots around the world
  - Diffusion of power in the world and continuing shifts in international alignments
  - Continued stress on interdiction issues such as narcotics, terrorism, chemical and nuclear weapons proliferation, technology transfer, etc.

- Potential new scientific and technological breakthroughs
- Needs for close support to military operations
- And a need to greatly improve the security of our people, facilities, and information.

- We face a problem ahead having pretty well completed the five-year buildup started in 1981

25X1

- Cadre of analysts and case officers has been beefed up
- With Gramm-Rudman we have come to the end of the rebuilding road, will have a hard time holding, and will now have to concentrate on getting more out of what we have - that's where the budget realities force our strategy
- Right now budget situation quite desperate - February 1 the President under Gramm-Rudman will have to issue a sequestration order which will reduce the funds available during the current fiscal year

- The 1987 budget request is pretty good but we have to expect a Gramm-Rudman reduction which will run somewhere into the billions and without some adjustment of Gramm-Rudman or significant revenue enhancements we could be in desperate financial shape. So that will require a lot of watching.

- The situation on the ground in the regional conflicts raised by the President at Geneva is requiring a lot of attention.
